

SYDNEY SYMPHONY SET TO RECORD TWO-YEAR MAHLER CYCLE WITH CONDUCTOR VLADIMIR ASHKENAZY

"For me, there's no point trying to describe Mahler's music, because genius is beyond description. The thing is to listen, and I hope you will join me on this journey, to experience this musical odyssey." Vladimir Ashkenazy

The Sydney Symphony has announced plans to record its two-year Mahler cycle (2010–2011) with Principal Conductor and Artistic Advisor Vladimir Ashkenazy. The recordings will be available for international distribution on the Sydney Symphony Live label and in Japan and other Asian markets on the Exton label, a major recording partner of the Sydney Symphony.

According to Sydney Symphony Managing Director Rory Jeffes, this is a significant occasion in the Orchestra's history.

"Vladimir Ashkenazy has never recorded a Mahler cycle and we are thrilled he has chosen the Sydney Symphony for this wonderful project. This recording endeavour will see the documentation of all the symphonies plus a significant selection of Mahler's orchestral songs including the 'Song of the Earth' – all recorded live in performance at the Sydney Symphony's home, the Sydney Opera House."

The project has received praise from many around Australia including former Prime Minister Paul Keating: "A complete recorded cycle of Mahler's symphonies is rarely undertaken over a short period of time, with the one orchestra and one conductor. It is not simply a milestone for our conductor and our orchestra, but it also will be an enormous event for the Sydney Symphony's audience and patrons. The complete recordings will represent a significant chapter for the orchestra with Vladimir Ashkenazy and will place them on the bookshelf of history."

The Sydney Symphony's 2010 Season, Vladimir Ashkenazy's second as Principal Conductor and Artistic Advisor, marks the start of the Mahler cycle as well as the 150th anniversary of the birth of Mahler. The cycle concludes in 2011 when the world marks the centenary of the composer's death.

Six separate programs make up the 2010 part of the two-year cycle, including gala performances of Mahler's Symphony No.8 (18 & 20 Feb); the first time in nearly 20 years the "Symphony of a Thousand" will be heard in the Sydney Opera House Concert Hall.

Beginning in 2006, the Sydney Symphony Live label is the only recording label wholly owned by an Australian orchestra. To date, eight CDs have been released on the label including the 2009 release of rare Rachmaninoff chamber works with Vladimir Ashkenazy on piano accompanying Sydney Symphony concertmaster Dene Olding.
